Cover Story
Warren AME Trailblazers
Emmajean Road has been the pride of the “black suburbanite” class since the late 1960s and early 1970s. Along with its distinctive ambience of pastoral peacefulness, this two block-long residential sanctuary shares a geographical border with its esteemed neighbor, the moneyed bedroom community of Ottawa Hills, and remains relatively unchanged since blacks first moved to the community nearly six decades ago.

Recently, however, a battle has begun over control of the community’s “spirit” or mystique. Michael Leizerman, a wealthy local attorney, recently purchased 20 acres of land at the end of the cul-de-sac on Emmajean. Leizerman then built a house on 10 of the acres and donated the remaining acres to the Buddhist Temple of Toledo. The Buddhists plan to erect a new temple on the connected property to serve their small 30-member community.

Although construction for the temple satisfies all zoning and code requirements, some of the long-term Emmajean residents oppose the project.

While concerns over potential increased traffic are often expressed as the reason for the resistance, the fear of change usually rises from beneath the surface.

“A lot of us [residents] have concerns about the amount of traffic,” said one homeowner, “But we haven’t really got street lights or curbs and storm sewer tile in here, so we like it because it is nice and quiet out here, the way it’s been for years. But having a temple down there in the woods changes things,” he quickly added.

Would the long-term residents’ interference occur if a Baptist Church were to be built rather than a Buddhist temple?

“The type of religion never came up at all. Just about how it will affect our neighborhood. Folks have been living here a long time,” the homeowner continued.

On the other hand, longtime Emmajean Road resident and pastor Rev. John Roberts concedes that the street is narrow and lacks curbs, but adds, “but you know me, I’m not going to get in a fight with anybody about ‘church.’ I’d rather have people angry with me than God,” he chuckled.

Rev. Rinsen Weik, the temple’s leader who is credentialed as a Buddhist minister, has hired consultant Jason Daniel to attempt to connect the Buddhist Temple organization and the Emmajean Road residents into a well-connected community. I am convinced that building mutual trust and ensuring more representative involvement is the only way to bridge the current differences. The discovery of joint solutions or the development of alternatives that are acceptable to both the old and new neighbors are, only then, likely to take place.

Impeach ... Full Speed Ahead

By Lafe Tolliver, Esq.

Guest Column

If you listened last week to the straightforward but telling remarks of Robert Mueller regarding his report on Russia’s attempted coup of the 2016 election and the findings of obstruction of justice by the now-sitting president, only one conclusion can be reached: IMPEACH!

We need no more hand wringing and monochromatic safe words from Democrats who are nervously looking at the possible 2020 election results and visualizing not seeing their names on a juicy Congressional payroll.

The short remarks (10 minutes in length) by Mueller were decisive and on point and, as always, a respecter of the limiting process he was laboring under insofar as he was constrained by policy from indicting a sitting president.

Mueller took off his “handcuffs” long enough to shout in whispers that his committee did not vindicate the president from a finding that he committed crimes while in office, but he would leave that verdict to a recalcitrant Congress that is gun shy of pulling the impeachment inquiry trigger.

There is no way that any person with two operating brain cells could take from his statements that, if Mueller had his way, Trump would be indicted on several counts of criminal activity regarding the obstruction of justice.

Even the hardened and conscience-seared press secretary, Sarah Huckabee Sanders could not put fire truck red lipstick on this pig and take it to the prom!

Nancy Pelosi, the extremely confident and able Speaker of the House, will have to take a monster dose of caffeine and steel herself for the pending fury that will engulf her if she tries to mollify more members of her caucus who see an impeachment inquiry as the only means by which Trump can be brought to task to atone for his many sins.

The nation is in a moral dilemma. On one hand, you have those who see the miscreant Trump as thumping his nose at decades of acceptable presidential protocol and conduct establishing how one acts as a president.

On the other hand, you have those who believe impeachment, although worthy and righteous, would only further divide the nation and with the very clear reality that a GOP-controlled Senate would not, as the jury, convict him of crimes committed while in office.

If one takes the high road and votes that the interest of the country takes clear precedence over party politics, then an impeachment inquiry is the only remedy to rectify the obnoxious abuses that Trump gladly puts the nation through.

I ran off a copy of volume two of the Mueller Report and, in my opinion, the findings of obstruction (may not all of them) yell and point a bony finger at Trump and the ways he has “slime balled” the Oval Office with his delusions that he is some type of autocrat-in-training who is untouchable by the laws of the land.

Of course, there are those who have the opinion that we should wait until the results of the 2020 election and, if Trump wins, proceed to impeachment but, if he loses, indict him!

But what about now? How morally long can you allow an unindicted co-conspirator to mock and prance around and throw sand into your face before you must reach out and discipline the errant bully child?

If Trump is mocking the Democrats to impeach him, it is because he remembered that when former president Bill Clinton was impeached, his poll numbers went up!

Trump needs a boost in his poll numbers to win in 2020 and being impeached would be his ticket to winning.

Regardless of the politics involved, Nancy Pelosi and the nervous Democrats need to bite the bullet, put on their big boy pants and take on this toxic president and the swamp creatures that he has populated his cabinet without a care that they are remotely competent (Ben Carson or Betsy DeVos anyone…?)

Even if the Democrats impeach and the Senate judges Trump not guilty, the Democrats would get the glory for being willing to fight for the rule of law as opposed to being viewed as whiny political cowards worried only about their seats in 2020.

An impeachment inquiry can serve as a cleansing of the Oval Office and would educate the American public on basic Constitutional Principles 101 and with a focused narrative of Trump’s criminal behavior, people would, it is hoped, understand the scope and depth of the criminality of the president that would warrant his removal from office.

The Democrats must stop listening to polls to tell them what is right. What is right is to impeach an arrogant, malignant narcissist who lies as easily as people blink. Trump has Pied Pipered both the GOP and Attorney General...

Snitch Them Out!

By the Manning Family

Another Mother’s Day has passed and one Toledo Mother is still praying that the murderer of her son, Cethus Manning II, will be identified, arrested and brought to justice soon. Early one Tuesday morning Gwen Manning received the heart breaking news no mother ever wants to hear, her son had been killed.

He was not killed in an automobile accident, or a mishap at work; he was shot in the face by a cold blooded killer as he sat and talked with his girlfriend in front of her grandmother’s house.

Gwen describes her son, a Rogers High School Graduate, as a “Good Kid”. He had no criminal record. Yet someone plotted to take his life. His life was not taken in a fit of rage, or as an act of self-defense, it was cold blooded murder. The early morning shots that took young Manning’s life changed the lives of those who loved him forever. His birthday is now remembered at Woodlawn Cemetery. Sweet memories have to replace his voice and the presence of the love they forever miss.

Cethus Manning II was the eighth homicide of 2017. His story is one of many unsolved murders in Toledo. These senseless killings must stop. But what can we as a community do?

Brothers and Sisters the time has come to snitch them out. Let the perpetrators(s) of this and other horrific crimes know they don’t run these streets. Inform on them, drop a dime, be a tipster. Do the right thing, because it is the right thing to do.

It is time for them to know and understand that there is a God Who sits high and looks low!

No longer must these cold blooded killers be allowed to sit at our tables, eat our bread, sleep in our beds, ride in our cars all while bragging about taking the life of another human being!

SNITCH them out! They must be exposed. Justice must and will come when the people of our community take a stand. If you know something, say something, or the blood of these victims is on your hands. There is nothing noble about keeping the secret of a murderer! Snitch Them Out! The taste of blood is in their mouths and they are thirsty for more! Oh, and by the way don’t think you are exempt from the havoc they wreak, these killers do not value life and the next life the take could be yours.
Racial Justice & Harm Reduction Summit

Sojourner’s Truth Editor

Black Women Rising, the Ohio Organizing Collaborative and local clergy and public health leaders hosted a day-long summit on May 17 in order to address the racial divide in the current drug overdose crisis.

The Harm Reduction: Harm to Healing Summit’s goal was to investigate how the false narrative that opioid addiction is a “whites only” medical epidemic impacts resources, treatment and stigma, while continuing to exacerbate racial disparities and barriers. Despite persistent assumptions that rates of opioid use, addiction and deaths are limited primarily to white Americans, data show that in 2017 the combined rate of opioid abuses among blacks and Latinos in Ohio resembles that of white Americans.

Even though the black community has historically evidenced higher rates of cocaine use when compared to the nation as a whole, the current issue is the increasing number of abused synthetic opioids. As recently as 2014, the number of black opioid-related deaths began to rise similarly to white opioid-related deaths. The number of overdoses involving black Americans and opioids has been increasing over the past eight years.

Experts from the Lucas County Health Department, the Drug Policy Alliance, the Harm Reduction Coalition and the National Congress on Faith and Social Justice offered perspectives and guidance on strategies for more equitable and comprehensive solutions to the crisis.

The panel consisted of Daniel Raymond, Kassandra Frederique, Alexis Pleus, Anton Parks, Sr., Tonya Duran and Rev. Jerome McCorry.

Raymond is the policy director for the Harm Reduction Coalition and has worked with federal and state officials, advocates and providers to expand critical drug user health interventions. He is the chairman of the Drug Users Health Alliance and serves on a host of other boards and committees in the state of New York that focus on drug addiction issues.

Frederique is the New York State director at the Drug Policy Alliance working for policy solutions to reduce the harms associated with drug use. She works with communities throughout the state to address and resolve the collateral consequences of the War on Drugs – state violence and in building a reparative justice framework that positions black and Latino leaders to create solutions to repair and end the harms of the drug war.

Pleus, a professional engineer and adjunct professor at SUNY Broome in the civil engineering technology program, founded Truth Pharm after she lost her son, Jeff, to a heroin overdose. She had discovered that as a parent she had been given false information about how to deal with addicted children so her primary focus is raising awareness, reducing stigma and providing accurate education on substance abuse disorder.

Parks, a recovering substance abuser and former gang member, sits on multiple boards, volunteers extensively in his community in Toledo and with the Re-entry Coalition. He fights against unjust legislation that bans returning citizens from Federal Safety Net programs and has traveled to D.C. to share his story of opioid addiction and stand up for returning citizens.

Duran, executive director of Believe Center, Inc, has dedicated her life to helping youth grow through sports into well-rounded additions to the Toledo community. She co-founded the Sports Academy Center organization and has been increasing over the past eight years.

The panel’s presentations and question and answer session followed. After lunch, a world café session was conducted by Blythe Barnow; a clergy corner with McCorry and naxalone training with Toles. Dinkins presented the day’s closing remarks.
Minority Business Showcase Connects Businesses with UT Faculty and Staff

Sojourner’s Truth Staff

The University of Toledo Office of Diversity and Inclusion and the Supply Chain Department hosted a Minority Business Showcase on Wednesday, May 29 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Ingman Room of the UT’s Main Campus Student Union.

Several dozen businesses brought information to explain their services and products to the hundreds of guests who attended the Showcase. The goal of the event was to connect University of Toledo faculty and staff with local businesses in certain categories of goods and services in which there may be department spending as well as personal spending opportunities.

The UT Office of Diversity and Inclusion operates the Minority Business Development Center on the Scott Park Campus which offers free business technical assistance, procurement assistance and certification.
What’s So Great About “Local” Food?

By Amy Stone and Patrice Powers-Barker, OSU Extension, Lucas County

The Truth Contributors

First of all, what is “local” food? There is no single definition for “local” foods. Food miles is sometimes used as a way to classify local foods. Food miles is the distance between where the food was grown and where it was purchased or eaten.

Other ways food might be determined as “local” include geographic region like city, county or state. Sometimes buying local is equated with direct-to-consumer marketing where producers sell products directly to the final consumer like at the farmers market or a farm stand.

Individual, family and community food decisions are made for a variety of reasons: nutrition and health, accessibility and convenience, food safety, the environment, economics, and enjoyment and taste. Some reasons people might choose local foods (versus foods that were grown farther away) are for convenience, taste or cost. If you grow any of your own food in a garden, that certainly local and it’s usually tasty and convenient! When produce is in season and being harvested from local growers, it is usually sold at an affordable price.

Farmers and producers, whether they are in our urban centers like Toledo, or out in rural areas, grow and raise the foods that we ultimately consume. Local food in Ohio might come from small, medium or large-scale growing sites. While some foods like tropical fruits and coffee beans will never grow in Ohio, many foods can be grown and produced near us. Some examples of local foods in Northwest Ohio:

- Bees pollinate our crops and give us honey.
- Tomatoes grown in fields in our region are processed into tomato sauce and canned tomatoes.
- Chickens raised on farms in in NW Ohio are raised for meat, while others lay eggs that we enjoy.
- Maple trees are tapped each winter to produce maple syrup to top off pancakes and more.
- Milk, yogurt and cheese comes from dairy cows right here in Ohio.

Agriculture is very diverse in Ohio and we as consumers can enjoy many locally grown and produced food right here in our own backyard.

One way to learn about what’s so great about local foods is to buy directly from the grower. We are very fortunate in our area to have options of different farmers markets as well as farm stands in various parts of the city of Toledo and in Lucas and Wood counties.

Another option to learn about local foods is a “field-trip” to a working farm. This month, you are invited to visit a family-owned and operated dairy farm in Northwest Ohio. The 2019 Fulton County Breakfast on the Farm will be hosted by Henricks & Krieger Dairy in Fayette, Ohio, west of Toledo.

The state of Ohio is unique because of the close proximity between rural and urban communities. While this field trip to the Fulton County Breakfast on the Farm is not quite as close as the Toledo Farmers Market or a local farm stand, it is in northwest Ohio - and it is an opportunity that many people don’t get the chance to see.

On Saturday, June 15, 2019 from 9 am – 1 pm, the public is invited to come out to a working dairy farm. A free breakfast will be served from 9 am – 12 pm. This fun, family-friendly event will give everyone a chance to meet local farmers, see dairy cows, and learn about agriculture in Ohio. Visitors will enjoy a free breakfast and discover more about the foods we eat.

While there is no registration fee, please register your friends and family so we know how many visitors to expect. Register can be done online at www.go.osu.edu/fultonbotfregister2019. You may also contact the OSU Extension Office in Fulton County with any questions at 419-337-9210. Additional information about the event can be found at: https://www.fultoncountyoh.com/1495/Breakfast-on-the-Farm

Mark your calendar and make plans to join us! It will be a day you and your family won’t soon forget. The Fulton County Breakfast on the Farm gives consumers an up-close and personal view of food production in today’s environment. This event gives families a look into the production of safe and healthy foods for Northwest Ohio and throughout the country. If you do visit Breakfast on the Farm, please be sure to look for OSU Extension, Lucas County staff at the event and say “hello”. We will have staff from Lucas County at the registration tent as well as at the final ice cream tent.
A Mental Health Moment

Giving Yourself a Pat on the Back….and a Break

By Bernadette Joy Graham, MA, LPC, NCC, Licensed Mental Health Therapist
The Truth Contributor

We as human beings all carry our own sets of issues, problems, disturbances and stress. Unfortunately, we often look at other’s lives as better or worse, but the bottom line is that our lives are “our lives.” As I counsel clients, each of them has issues he or she wants to work out. Being a counselor is a career to help others process their issues, fears, anger and so forth. Counselors are non-judgmental and provide clients with the tools necessary to work through those issues.

An individual in counseling provides clients the opportunity to create goals they wish to achieve and objectives on how to arrive and complete those goals. More often than not, many clients are very, very, very hard on themselves. Yes, we have all made mistakes, we have made ill choices in our lives and the truth is we cannot change the past but most of us stay in the past. The best we can do as human beings is learn from our mistakes and take the experiences that we felt less desirable and do better.

Counseling is not a place to come to be criticized or to be put down…we can do that all by ourselves. As human beings, we often look at the negative, the bad choices, the things we cannot change and find ourselves living in a past we are unable to change.

Regardless of your challenges, you deserve a break. I wish I could say that we could do that by hearing it and receiving it from others whom seem to care but that’s not often the case. Some of us are lucky enough to have a great support system, some of us are not.

Summer has just begun. Many of us have already tossed out our new year’s resolutions for whatever reason. Today, take a mental health moment and take the time to give yourself a pat on the back for doing better, making change for the better and continuing to try.

If you must look at your past, look at how far you have come from wherever you were from childhood on up to decades of age and experience and even yesterday. The only one who can give up on you is you. Many of us have made it through obstacles, challenges, bad choices and a literal hell. Give yourself permission to know and understand that you deserve a break and a pat on the back from YOU! You deserve some time to say, “you know what, I did what I did but I’m still standing, I’m still breathing and I’m going to keep on keepin on.”

Dr. Mallory Williams

By Fletcher Word

Dr. Mallory Williams, MD, a Toledo resident, is professor of surgery and chief of Trauma & Critical Care at Howard University College of Medicine in Washington, D.C. He is an academic acute care surgeon who specializes in general surgery, trauma surgery and critical care surgery.

Although most of his work these days is centered in the nation’s capital, the oft-traveled Dr. Williams home is very much in the Toledo area with his wife Patrice and three daughters and his “great friends in the community.” He and family moved here about nine years ago when he accepted a position with the University of Toledo Medical Center to head the Division of Trauma, Critical Care and Acute Care Surgery.

Dr. Williams is a native of Chicago but, at an early age, moved with his mother to East St. Louis, then back to Chicago and, finally, while still in his early, quite formative years, to Fort Meade, MD so that his mother could find the employment which had been difficult to find in Chicago.

Settling in one of the bedroom communities of the Fort Meade area, Dr. Williams encountered one of his first mentors, Cleveland Chandler, PhD, who became “a benefactor of the family.” Chandler, a professor of economics and chairman of the Economics Department at Howard University, was the first in a long line of mentors and influential friends who have helped shape his life.

Chandler influenced the young student to head to Morehouse College for an undergraduate degree. At Morehouse he served as a Ford Foundation Fellow and National Institutes of Health Research Fellow. After college he entered the University of Maryland School of Medicine and then trained in general surgery at Wayne State University/Detroit Medical Center.

Then began a career focused on relieving the pain of trauma along with promoting the education of future health care professionals. That was also the start of a life during which Dr. Williams has been engaged in issues of social justice that affect disadvantaged communities around the world.

As a combat veteran, Lt. Colonel Dr. Williams served his country in Operation Iraqi Freedom as a combat surgeon and Chief of Surgery of the United States Army’s 345th combat support hospital and, later, in Afghanistan, as co-commander of the 1st Forward Surgical Team during Operation Freedom’s Sentinel.

As a teacher, he has been awarded the teacher of the year award by both the residents and medical students at the University of Toledo College of Medicine and his research efforts have been recognized by a number of surgical societies including the Detroit Surgical Association, the Eastern Association for the Surgery of Trauma and the New England Surgical Society.

As a writer, Dr. Williams has authored over 30 peer-reviewed manuscripts, textbook chapters and commentaries and has also examined issues of critical importance to minority communities. He is the co-author of a National Medical Association position paper titled “The Violence Epidemic in the African American Community: A Call for Comprehensive Reform;” the co-author of a manuscript titled “Reducing the impact of violence on the health status of African-Americans: Literature review and recommendations from the Society of Black Academic Surgeons;” and the co-author of a manuscript titled: “Patterns of... continued on page 11
U.S. Senator Sherrod Brown (D-OH) has joined his colleagues in introducing the Maternal Care Access and Reducing Emergencies (Maternal CARE) Act, legislation to address persistent biases and shortcomings in our nation’s health care system that have contributed to the ongoing crisis in Black maternal mortality.

The United States is one of only 13 countries in the world where the rate of maternal mortality is now worse than it was 25 years ago. The CDC estimates that about 700 women die each year in the United States as a result of pregnancy or delivery complications. The disparity in maternal mortality also continues to grow - as the risk of dying from pregnancy-related causes is three to four times higher for black women than that of white women. Further, black women are twice as likely to suffer from life-threatening pregnancy complications.

“Too many black mothers are dying in Ohio and across the country, and it’s past time to correct the injustices that have contributed to this crisis. This is one important step we can take toward ensuring black mothers and babies are getting the care they need and deserve,” said Brown. Specifically, Brown’s Maternal CARE Act would:

- Invest $25 million in program to address racial bias in maternal health care. The new grant program will be directed to medical schools, nursing schools, and other health professional training programs to support evidence-based implicit bias training that will improve care for Black women by reducing bias in judgment or behavior resulting from implicit attitudes or stereotypes.
- Allocate $125 million to identify high-risk pregnancies, and provide mothers with the culturally competent care and resources they need. The new grant program will help states develop and carry out pregnancy medical home programs. These programs improve care by incentivizing maternal health care providers to deliver integrated health care services to pregnant women and new mothers and reduce adverse maternal health outcomes, maternal deaths, and racial health disparities in maternal mortality and morbidity.

- Help medical schools incorporate bias recognition in clinical skills testing by directing the National Academy of Medicine to study and make recommendations.

The legislation was led by Senator Kamala Harris (D-CA) and is co-sponsored by Senators Tammy Baldwin (D-WI), Richard Blumenthal (D-CT), Cory Booker (D-NJ), Ben Cardin (D-MD), Bob Casey (D-PA), Tammy Duckworth (D-IL), Dick Durbin (D-IL), Mazie Hirono (D-HI), Doug Jones (D-AL), Tim Kaine (D-VA), Amy Klobuchar (D-MN), Ed Markey (D-MA), Jeff Merkley (D-OR), Bernie Sanders (I-VT), Debbie Stabenow (D-MI), Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), and Ron Wyden (D-OR). Companion legislation has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Rep. Alma Adams (D-NC).

Brown’s leadership is supported by a number of organizations, including: the American College of Nurse-Midwives, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Association of Maternal & Child Health Programs, Black Mamas Matter Alliance, Black Women Birthing Justice, Black Women’s Health Imperative, Children’s Hospital of Philadelphia, Commonseonse Childbirth - National Perinatal Task Force, Every Mother Counts, In Our Own Voice, National Black Women’s Reproductive Justice Agenda, March of Dimes, National Association to Advance Black Birth, National Birth Equity Collaborative, National Black Midwives Alliance, National Health Law Program, National Partnership for Women & Families, National WIC Association, National Women’s Law Center, Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Society for Maternal-Fetal Medicine, WomenHeart, and 1,000 Days.

In March, Brown introduced the Healthy Maternal and Obstetric Medicine (Healthy MOM) Act, legislation to ensure that all women eligible for coverage through the Affordable Care Act (ACA) insurance marketplaces, as well as women eligible for other individual or group health plan coverage, can access affordable health coverage throughout their pregnancies. The bill would do this by establishing a special enrollment period (SEP) for expectant mothers. Right now, marriage, divorce, having a baby, adoption and changing jobs are considered qualifying life events that trigger a special enrollment period. However, becoming pregnant is not considered a qualifying event. The bill would also guarantee 12 months of continuous Medicaid eligibility for postpartum women, thus removing key barriers that often prevent mothers from getting the care they need after birth.

Brown’s Healthy MOM Act will work to improve outcomes by expanding quality access to care, which research demonstrated could help prevent pregnancy related deaths.
Ask Ryan

Dear Ryan,

I have been working out now for about three years and I want to get more results. I am a 36 year old male and I consistently train three days per week. I do a total body workouts and they last for about two hours. What could I be doing to add some more size to me?

Dear Size-Needed,

A majority of people put more emphasis on the workout and not enough on nutrition. A good workout along with proper nutrition will harvest new results for your physique. You must first take a look at your eating habits. Are you getting enough protein in your diet? Are you drinking enough water? How much fats and carbs are you consuming?

Evaluate your diet and make changes to fit your desired results. Protein should be at least one gram per pound of lean body tissue. This is the most important macro nutrient that your body needs to produce the results that you are seeking.

A good starting point with your food ratio for putting on muscle mass and not gaining fat is 40 percent protein, 30 percent carbs and 30 percent fats.

Two hours in the gym is a bit much unless you are doing your aerobic work too. Depending on what you are doing, you may not be giving your muscles enough time to rest between workouts. This will cause you to over train and put a halt on your muscle gains. You should try to break up your workouts and concentrate on the large muscle groups such as: legs, back and chest.

On a three-day a week program, I would work legs and shoulders one day, back and biceps another, chest and triceps for the last workout. Also switch the days you do bi’s and tri’s so that you’re not always working them with your chest and back (Back bi’s one week then the next week do tri’s with your back). The days and order you would choose to do them are completely up to you.

Do mass building exercise such as: squats, straight leg dead lifts, bench press, incline press, seated rows and pull-ups. Do a good warm-up set.

After you warm-up then pyramid up for four to five sets. On your last two sets you should go heavy for at least five reps. Don’t worry about how much weight you can lift. Make sure that the weight you are lifting is heavy but comfortable and manageable for you to lift. Five heavy reps with good strict form is what is important. You cannot sacrifice proper form for heavy weights.

Remember quality not quantity along with common sense is what builds good muscle and prevents injury. Change your workouts every four to six weeks so that your muscles don’t get used to the same old workout. Shocking the muscle like this will also help it to grow. Stay focused on your goal, eat well, train hard and good luck achieving your Dream Bodies.

Law Enforcement Related Injuries in the United States.”

As a reader, Dr. Williams’ curiosity is boundless. His mother was an English teacher, primarily at various Baltimore-area colleges, such as Coppin State. He mentions with evident fondness his excursions through the writings of classical authors, such as Charles Dickens, Mark Twain, Herman Melville, and those of the modern classicists such as Richard Wright and Toni Morrison.

“I am mesmerized by Ishmael’s transformation,” he notes of the hero of his favorite novel, Moby Dick. “Melville is doing something on a level I haven’t seen any other author do.”

As a leading member of the community, Dr. Williams is the president of the Reede Scholars, a nonprofit organization committed to a healthcare policy that produces equity, quality and access for disadvantaged groups. He is a member of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, the Prince Hall Masonic Order and is the current president of the local Alpha Phi Boule.

There is perhaps nothing more significant in the life of Dr. Williams, however, than his commitment to the development of a health care policy that positively impacts the lives of those in the minority population. His research interests, according to one biography, “include better understanding health care delivery in safety net hospitals and improving communication and team dynamics in high stress health care delivery areas such as the trauma care unit, intensive care unit and operating room.”

“I try to do what I can to bring a great experience to the community,” he says.
Myrna Gross Banks, born and reared in Toledo, is a lifelong member of Warren. She has been a part of baby contests as an infant and toddler. She is a member of the Young People’s Division, the youth choir, the youth usher board and is a Children’s Ark Classroom Aide. Nevaeh is an honor roll student and enjoys singing, dancing, roller skating and playing her viola. She plans to become a doctor.

“When I look back on everything, my pastor and church family have always been there and I owe them everything,” said Nevaeh.

Willie Bragg, a member of Norwood Baptist Church, is a lifelong Toledoan. He graduated from UT and taught schools with TPS for over 30 years. Councilwoman Yvonne Harper has represented District 4 since May 25, 2015. Harper is a retired Toledo Municipal Court bailiff. Her other experience includes serving as the past executive director of the Lucas County Democratic Party and the long-time, current president of the Perry Burroughs Democratic Women’s Club.

Maurine Simmons was honored as a Trailblazer posthumously. She was a long-time receptionist at Senior Centers, Inc prior to her retirement.
Martin Luther King, Jr.: Voice for Equality! by James Buckley, Jr. and YouNeek Studios

By Terri Schlichenmeyer
The Truth Contributor

The heroes in comic books arrive in fancy costumes.

Their heads are ringed by bubbles that say things like “POW!” and “ZOOM!” and that’s when bad guys fall like dead twigs from a tree. BAM! All the heroes in comic books are super-powerful and mighty but here’s the thing: as you’ll see in the new book Martin Luther King, Jr.: Voice for Equality! by James Buckley, Jr. and YouNeek Studios, real heroes sometimes quietly wear suits and ties.

Welcome to this history tour. Your guides are Libby (a.k.a Lady Liberty, the statue) and the boy who will someday be your “Uncle Sam.”

Today, they’ll take you on a tour of the life of a boy named Mike.

Yes, that was his name at birth: Michael King, Jr., but when Mike was a boy, his father changed both their names to honor a religious man. That was also when Martin Luther King, Sr. decided to become a minister. Later, Martin Luther King Jr. did, too.

Back then, young King knew that it was wrong to deny someone their rights, based on the color of their skin. As a child, he vowed to do something about Jim Crow laws someday but it wasn’t until he was older and visited Connecticut that he learned what it was like not to be segregated. That trip changed his focus: he was still a man of God, but he’d use his talents as speechmaker and leader to gain civil rights for African Americans.

It wasn’t easy.

King’s house was bombed and, although his family was safe, it was scary. His followers and friends were beaten and bloodied in fields, on the streets, and in marches. His life was threatened and that landed him in the hospital once.

And yet, King never gave up; he persevered by reaching out to politicians and other influential people who could help the cause. He planned and marched, even though there were times when he was just plain tired. And he did it until the day he died on a hotel balcony, killed by a man with a gun…

Kids who struggle to read, or who claim they don’t like to read may change their tune with Martin Luther King, Jr.: Voice for Equality! Parents take note: this isn’t your old-school stuffy history book.

Using the younger versions of two historical icons, author James Buckley, Jr. tells the story of Dr. King through comic-book-like illustration and balloon-text, mediums that are familiar to both readers and reluctant readers. Inherently, that makes this a tale kids can relate to, but Buckley Jr. also uses modern language that children understand, which helps get them involved by subtly including them in the emotions inside the story. Crisp illustrations by YouNeek Studios then keeps them engaged.

That makes this a story that could turn a middle-schooler’s groans into smiles this summer, while it’ll still appeal to kids who love books. For either kind of child in your home, Martin Luther King, Jr.: Voice for Equality! is a book they’ll ZOOM! through.

The guest speaker for this year’s Trailblazer Banquet was Rev. Cecil Jerome Graham, pastor of True Vine Missionary Baptist Church.

The program opened with a musical prelude by Calvin Hughes & Company. Nate Jackson served as the master of ceremony and Deborah Washington, PhD, welcomed guest and honorees.

After Rev. Darlene Williams, associate pastor of Warren, offered the afternoon’s prayer, guests were treated to a musical selection by Deborah Garner of St. Paul Missionary Baptist Church.

Dinner was then served as the honorees were acknowledged.

After Rev. Graham’s address, the honorees were presented with tributes and Rev. Gordon and Chairman Debra Jelks closed the ceremony with their remarks.
