A Late Peek
By Rev. Donald L. Perryman, PhD

I endured the personal humiliation of being vilified as the “madwoman” with the strange name, strange hair—you know what that means—and with the strange ideas. Those ideas being that all people deserve equal representation.

– Lani Guinier

After a seemingly endless campaign season, we are finally less than a week away from the general election to be held in Toledo on Tuesday, November 5, 2019.

As we approach the homestretch, it is “all over but the shouting” for many of the political contests, as the outcomes appear to be fairly certain. In others, however, the conditions are ripe for a surprise.

In today’s column I take a late look at how a few contests are poised to shape up on election day.

Toledo City Council Winners:

District One: Tyrome Riley
Riley failed to get a majority of the vote total in the primary election. If the 57 percent of the people who previously voted against Riley now cast a ballot for his opponent Shaun Strong in the general, this could be a close race. Although Riley has been known to ‘shoot himself in the foot’ politically, Strong has also recently been the victim of unnecessary self-inflicted wounds of his own.

Riley has endorsements in hand from Fire Fighters Local 92, Northwest Ohio Building and Construction Trades Council, Toledo Police Patrolmen’s Association, AFSCME Power in Action and Plumbers and Pipefitters Union. These endorsements and experience take Riley over the top in what could be a tight race.

District Two: Matt Cherry
Cherry, current council president, is often criticized for his unconditional support of the Kapszukiewicz administration’s agenda and not having command of city council’s own agenda. Yet, he has the support of the Building Trades and Construction Council, who is out knocking doors for him. Labor wants Cherry on council so he wins this race with approximately 65 percent of the vote over challenger Abigail Sadowy.

District Three: Theresa Gadus
Perhaps the biggest tossup of all of the current council matchups, Gadus, very civically-involved but soft-spoken, has been out knocking doors but East Toledo has been leaning more conservative over time, giving the “backwards-looking” Glen Cook the potential to provide Republican representation on council. However, the word on the street is ‘the more Cook talks, the more good things come to Gadus.’ So, if Cook continues to stick his foot in his mouth, Gadus wins this contest in a close one.

District Four: Yvonne Harper

This battle is a head-on collision of two old-school politicians with similar passions but different styles. Yvonne Harper, the incumbent, is perhaps more外交家 and pugnacious, while the challenger June Boyd, is perhaps, a passive-aggressive pugilist whose countermanship commentary can be sharp, cutting and effective.

I think Harper wins this race handily as a result of being in touch with the needs of her constituency. Her ‘I’m In the Community’ mantra has proved to be true as she seems to stick up for the people of her district even if her thinking on the wedge issues in her district does not always align with conventional wisdom.

District Five: Sam Melden
Despite the Republicans pouring an avalanche of money into District 5, Melden has kept his nose to the grindstone by knocking on doors and, surprisingly, expressing a progressive agenda. The young politician has learned much from his previous defeats and is bringing up new issues, developing a turnout model which targets youth and talking to and about those people that might not otherwise have voice or representation.

Melden’s opponent is Tom Names, a professional engineer who retired in 2014. Names feels that his understanding on issues like fixing city streets and expanding the water treatment system is a professional experience that is missing on city council.

The Republicans will turn out to support Names but Melden has expanded his campaign to include talking to anyone and anybody under the age of 40 in order to start recruiting for a new generation of leaders. Melden wins with over 60 percent of the vote.

District Six: Chris Delaney
The only interesting thing about this contest is that when Delaney wins, will he then almost immediately announce that he wants to run for Lucas County Sheriff to replace the retiring John Tharp.

The retired Toledo Police officer was employed by TPD for over 30 years and his father worked as the corrections administrator for the Lucas County Jail. Delaney, the incumbent, wins this race hands down.

Toledo Public Schools:
Board Member: Sheena Barnes
Representation is paramount in a school district where a majority of the students are students of color. The Toledo School Board has not had an African-American member since Randall Parker III, who was appointed in April, 2015 to replace Cecelia Adams but lost in his bid for a full term later that same year. Councilman Larry Sykes also previously served on the TPS Board through 2013.

Look for Sheena Barnes, an African-American woman, to win a spot on the Toledo School Board. Barnes is transparent and passionate and will inevitably ruffle feathers with some of the School Board’s establishment. Her message around representation is important though, and will carry her through as she fights both for the students and respect for herself. I think that the TPS parents and students will appreciate it.

Trump Playing the Race Card … Again!
By Lafe Tolliver, Esq
Guest Column

Of all the possible odious words that can be uttered in these United States, there are two that are jockeying for the first-place trophy in the annuals of American history.

This foul word has a documented history of generating paralyzing darkness, terror, unmitigated hatred and wrath against people of color. A word whose history has coils and tentacles that reach from hundreds of years in the past to the present.

Only in America could these two vituperative twins be allowed oxygen to breath, populate and influence our culture and how we view one another.

The time in American history where America debauched itself with the African slave trade; and by strength of sheer will and brute power, America converted kidnapped Africans to that of chattel slaves.

One word we are acutely aware of and that is the unspeakable “N” word. A word that, to my great sadness, is still used by certain black ninnies who parade themselves around as if they are the savants of black history and culture and who, misguided no doubt, believe that they using such a vile slur means it is being defanged and re-purposed for good.

Not so now and it never will be so, but I will leave that for another discussion at another time.

The current word that Herr Trump is now trying to get mileage out to in order to help his losing impeachment cause is invoking the word, “lynching” to explain how he is being treated by the Democrats.

What a load! Imagine, if you would, an extremely wealthy and ignorant white male who grew up with both a silver and gold spoon in his mouth, trying to pimp off the documented images of African Americans being lynched as being his personal political experience!

Oh, this is so rich and raw about a person who has repeatedly demonstrated that he does not possess a modicum of decorum or knowledge when it comes to discourse about the agonizing and myriad issues of race in America.

Trump’s potty mouth on issues of race is documented for all to see and hear. No fake news! Trump has shown a peculiar venom to debase all things black and to engage in race baiting tactics (such as using the word, lynching) in order to gin up his political base.

Regrettably that same base which, unless they denounce his use of that sordid word now being used as a political foil, will be typecast as the howling mobs so frequently seen at the lynching of African-American males and females (yes, children were also lynched!).

Crazed and fiendish mobs of white folks that yodeled and howled to the moon when innocent black men, women and children were, without any accompanying rules of law, dragged to the nearest tree and, with or without an accompanying bonfire burning them, were murdered as if they were just a foaming mouth rabid dog.

No grace. No mercy. No last words. Just barbarism of the first order and yet this president, an embarrassment to the White House; and who possesses no sense of historical analysis, would place himself at the center of one also being lynched!

At the center because the Democrats have chosen to uphold the rule of law over that of a con, a cheat and a fraudster and for that, Trump’s sycophants in the Republican GOP Senate are willing to turn a blind eye and deaf ear to his race mongering gibberish.

Is Trump using the “L” word for his own political gain and profit?

Of course he is! What else does he know? He is an opportunist of the first degree and has no shame in debasing himself and the White House with his racist shenanigans.

Herr Trump knows the atomic bomb impact that such a word will have in the political debate about him being possibly impeached; and he tosses that “L” word out like a hand grenade and sits back to enjoy the explosion.

I contend that when historians of this abnormal time, record how a certain swath of ugly Americans chose hate over enlightenment, conspiracy theories over truth and debauchery over civility, that Trump will be properly assigned to the dust bin and his name will forever remain a reproach to any politician who would remotely consider repeating his Trumpian ways.

So, go ahead Herr Trump, resurrect the hateful images of the “L” word and spread its dung like a thick lotion on the hateful waters that you constantly churn and see what turns up on the shores.

You will be the eventual loser and regrettably America will have to bear the thick keloid scars you have inflicted for a generation to come.

Citizens of Our Great Community Deserve Better

By Councilman Tom Waniewski

When I was growing up in north Toledo off Lagrange Street, my three brothers and I fought often. We also loved each other a lot. There was something endearing, as I look back, on this sibling dichotomy that took place in our neighborhood of manicured lawns and freshly-painted wood-frame homes. But brothers being brothers, the rivalry got a bit heated occasionally inside our well-kept, two-bedroom home.

One day, when both our parents were working and my oldest brother at 13 was babysitting, things got a bit rough. In frustration over something I can no longer recall as the source, I picked up a Downy bottle to throw at my brother. It was a small, plastic, empty Downy bottle. What harm could come out of throwing a small, plastic, empty Downy bottle? Plenty as it turned out. The bottle hit my brother square in the mouth knocking out his two front teeth.

I had another Downy moment a couple of months back when, in my attempt to resolve a long-standing nuisance in the district I represent, I used an entomological term to describe the ongoing nuisance that was creating an unhealthy environment for neighbors. Next to pot holes, nuisance complaints are the largest number of calls I receive. It was the wrong choice of words. It hurt people. And I regret using it.

Since I consider myself somewhat studied in English lexicon, it seemed like the right metaphor. As harmless as an empty plastic detergent bottle. I was wrong. After meeting with Councilman Larry Sykes, and another meeting with Pastor Cedric Brock and Earl Mack of the Buffalo Soldiers, the historical context became clear. These community leaders, who have worked so hard to erase prejudices and right the ship of inequality in our community, helped me see the pain such a metaphor can bring. In other words, what I thought was a minute descriptive really wasn’t at all. Never mind the fact that I painted a business climate with too broad a stroke of negativity.

I’ve worked a long time helping people of all races and income levels. From my volunteer work and fund-raising for non-profits, public service has been in my DNA in the upbringing from wonderful parents and a supportive church and school system. So knowing that I had hurt others was not sitting well with me. All citizens of our great community that I love deserve better.

The community leaders with whom I’ve met are leading the charge and fighting the good fight. Sykes, Brock, and Mack are to be commended for their work. But there has to be more. And it has to come from me and people like me by empathizing with the inequalities and reaching out to correct it. Otherwise I’m defeating their hard work and reaching for that Downy bottle again.

NYT Report Found That Frank LaRose’s Purge “Was Wrong About 20 Percent”

The Ohio Democratic Party this week provided the Ohio Secretary of State’s office with an updated public records request in response to their refusal to turn over any documents related to the voter purge that removed more than 180,000 registered voters from the rolls ahead of this year’s election.

“Frank LaRose claims to value transparency, but his office is clearly stonewalling our request for information about how they handled the error-riddled voter purge they conducted this fall,” said Ohio Democratic Party Chairman David Pepper. “As the New York Times documented earlier this month, it was concerned Ohioans, good government groups and voting rights advocates that caught LaRose’s errors and kept him... continued on page 12
Local Advocates Speak out about Lead Poisoning Issue

Sojourner’s Truth Staff

National Lead Poisoning Prevention Week was held this year from October 20 to October 26 and local advocates commemorated the occasion with a press conference and a call to the city’s administration to start working now to get the appropriate legislation in place to prevent more casualties.

Members of the Toledo Lead Poisoning Prevention Coalition, faith-based leaders, representatives from social justice organizations and community advocates stood at the podium with Toledo Councilman Larry Sykes and the Black and Brown Coalition on Tuesday, October 22, to vent their frustration at the current state of affairs in the city’s on-again-off-again battle to rid dwellings of lead poisoning.

“Lead poisoning is not a political issue, this is a moral issue and we will do what is necessary to rectify this issue and save our children,” said Bishop Robert Culp, pastor of First Church of God and co-chairman of the Black/Brown Coalition.

Since 2016, when the first lead ordinance was passed, noted Rev. Otis Gordon, pastor of Warren AME Church, an additional 1,000 children with elevated blood lead levels have been diagnosed, which only includes those who have been tested.

Lead-based paint is the most common source of lead exposure for young children and much of Toledo’s older housing stock still contains lead-based paint. An estimated 3,500 children are afflicted by lead poisoning in the Toledo area, it is estimated, and between 45,000 and 60,000 homes contain such paint.

Children afflicted by lead poisoning will suffer health and cognitive development issues, and a life-time of social, educational and economic effects that will significantly impair their life outcomes and ability to succeed.

The 2016 ordinance approved by City Council was struck down by the courts as being too biased against some homeowners. Since then, according to George Thomas, an attorney with the Advocates for Basic Legal Equality, enough work has been done to correct the legal deficiencies that the city administration can now go forward with the task of bringing together the interested parties to hammer out the new legislation.

Ohio Governor Mike DeWine also commemorated National Lead Poisoning Prevention Week by holding two events with members of his Lead Advisory Committee – one at the Cleveland Clinic Children’s Hospital and one in Toledo at Marshall STEMM Academy, a Toledo Public School.

“We do not have to wait,” wrote Sykes in the days before the press conference held by local organizations. “We and our legal counsel, ABLE, have carefully reviewed the current court case. Nothing prevents the City from passing a new ordinance that simply avoids the legal issues in that case. Lead poisoning doesn’t wait for frivolous lawsuits and neither can we. It’s our understanding that the city’s law department has also concluded that City Council may proceed.”
This Is Our Watch….

By Dominique Warren
The Truth Contributor

This year I had the pleasure of serving as one of a few black legislative directors for the 116th Congress in the Office of Representative Rashida Tlaib. It became all the more important when we were assigned to serve on the Committee on Oversight and Reform chaired by Elijah Cummings of Baltimore, Maryland.

I had met Chairman Cummings years before while living in West Baltimore during the uprisings after the murder of Freddie Gray. With a booming voice and stated determination to fight for justice, truth and for black liberation, he was truly inspiring, living up to his reputation as a giant among men.

I would later live a few blocks from there when I raised my daughter Lois and would often see him in the community because he was firmly rooted in Baltimore and its residents. He had a youth program that served thousands and he worked feverishly to ensure that Baltimore youth were able to reach their full potential.

He said that “our children are the living messages we send to a future that we will never see” and his service compelled him to ensure that the future was better for them.

He was a stalwart of justice, pursuer of truth. When we were asked to be on the Oversight Committee, I was overjoyed because I knew the work that we would undertake would be central to ensuring our nation and democracy was strengthened and we were defending people who could not defend themselves.

Our first hearing was on the exploding prices of prescription drugs and how Big Pharma has been profiting on the market while people were suffering without medication, dying, and going bankrupt to stay alive. He knew that the role of Congress was to serve people, not shareholders and without action, people will die due to the lack of access to life-saving medications.

My last hearing with Chairman Cummings was about the abuses of immigrant children at the hands of the Department of Homeland Security in detention facilities. Like dozens of times before, Chairman Cummings commanded the room and demanded accountability saying that it’s not just about the deeds that we do to children, but the memories of these traumatic experiences committed by the government that will remain.

He was a defender of democracy. The Committee on Oversight and Reform had a tremendous responsibility for investigating interference in the 2016 election as well as oversight of the conduct of President Trump and his administration in whether they purposely acted in ways that undermined the rule of law and democracy. This responsibility weighed heavy on the Chairman and on all of us as we were charged to pursue the truth and where that may lead us. The Chairman and his team were the best there are on the Hill and we found numerous laws broken and institutions weakened to interfere with federal elections, accountability and to inflict suffering on citizens.

He passed major legislation out of the Committee to protect elections, root out corruption and self-dealing in the federal government, and to hold elected and confirmed officials to the highest ethical and moral standards. He was the North Star for Democrats in the House and never lost legitimacy in the truths and facts that he told to the American people.

He was a fighter for Black Liberation. He had what King said was the fierce urgency of now. Chairman Cummings “realized that with African American people where we’ve been blocked from being all that God meant for us to be, I don’t have time to be patient.”

A colleague of mine and I reached out to the chairman on the day of the Christchurch terrorist attack by a white supremacist, asking for a hearing on white supremacy and its threat to our way of life. He didn’t just grant us one hearing, but three, that confronted white supremacy on the consequences of inaction, the lack of federal response, and on transnational white supremacy. Allowing young senior staffers to lead on issues such as this was the norm for him. He also focused lately on the effects of childhood trauma and what it means for our future, particularly for children of color. I will be forever grateful to him for embracing our fight for a better nation.

This was his watch. “I’m begging the American people to pay attention to what is going on. Because if you want to have a democracy intact for your children, and your children’s children, and generations yet unborn we’ve got to guard this moment… this is our watch.” said Chairman Cummings.

As our most sacred rights, such as voting rights, have been attacked and weakened the chairman was adamant about preserving those rights. He admitted that despite being in the last leg of his amazing life, that current events increased the need for him to work day and night to preserve and strengthen this democracy for not just African Americans, but all Americans.

His life was a call to action for us to work harder for a country that we own and for a future that we deserve. As Chairman Cummings exhaled his last breath and ended his watch on this earthly domain, we must step forward because this is our watch.

Indiana Avenue MBC Holds Trunk or Treat Festivities for Kids

Several hundred children and their parents turned out for Indiana Avenue Missionary Baptist Church’s annual Trunk or Treat festivities on Sunday, October 27 on the grounds of the church. From 4 to 6 p.m., children, ages three to 12, were treated to carnival games, horse-back rides and trunks full of goodies.

The event spread from the Fellowship Hall, to the lot across the street and back to the parking lot where dozens of trunks were open with treats for the children.

The evening was sponsored by Indiana Avenue MBC and hundreds of church members and volunteers.

Couture Toledo Fashion Weekend

Sojourner’s Truth Staff

Autumn Gineen “Atelier” introduced her art, fashion and designs to an appreciative audience on October 11 and 13 at The Truth Art Gallery with her Couture Toledo Fashion Weekend.

“I wanted to bring more awareness to the art of sewing by incorporating local artists work in some of the pieces. This is a dying art that many of us want to see brought back into action,” said Gineen of her event.

The total numbers for attendance for the weekend were about 80 people. The next fashion weekend will be July 31-Aug 2, 2020. You can find Gineen’s custom jewelry, accessories and items from the runway show inside the Truth Art Gallery. Pieces are for men and women.

“My goal is to raise enough funds to open a non-profit artists’ studio where people of all ages and genders can express themselves artfully. These classes will include artists sessions, sewing lessons and more,” she said.

The weekend’s participants included: Ixpressions Models – Iasha, Amber, Omega along with other models – Kristine, Airica, Marcelia, Mackenzie, Stazia, Deseana, Johanna, Toshaand Ivory.

Some of the other designers who contributed to the event were Diana L. Evans with model Aviance Hill; Victoria of Brand - Curve Envy with Model Tenysha Roberts and Edwanna Streeter.

Vendors Jamés Atim and Clothing brand Ayaiya added to the show as did Chawone Ardrey the caterer of Savannas Soul Kitchen

Gineen extended thanks to the show’s managers Myrtle Sparks and Virgilio Baker

“Special thanks to Tamiko Davis, McKinney Tariq Chapman and my children for the assistance and late-night sewing sessions,” said Gineen.

“We are bringing the city together, one stitch at a time.”

Accomplished writer, journalist and critic Toure was the featured speaker.
Toure has worked as a co-host on MSNBC, featured writer in Rolling Stone magazine, professor at NYU’s Clive Davis Institute of Recorded Music, and published author. He delivered a passionate speech that covered community impact, injustice, and racism. “We as a community are used to lose. When we fight against injustice, we are fighting for our country. It’s our country too. America is sick right now, and we must see through Trump’s lies to make our America great again,” explained Toure.

He also explained how to identify and deal with micro-aggression. An example of micro-aggression provided by the speaker, is when an individual of the majority race publicly questions the professional skills of the minority race. “People may not mean to be racist, but this is not about uncovering racism but defining it by biases. It’s not your purpose to educate people about racism. A win is just living your life, in your own way. Don’t take the weight of that responsibility. Their ignorance is theirs to own,” said Toure.

Fedor Appointed to State Report Card Study Committee

Last week, State Sen. Teresa Fedor (D-Toledo) was appointed to a state study committee that will examine Ohio’s school report cards.

“We need to fix our broken school report card system,” said Fedor. “There is increasing evidence that school report cards, across the board, do not reliably measure the quality of education that our children receive. In fact, they’re a better measure of poverty than academic achievement. This causes a harmful ripple effect impacting our children, our schools and our communities.”

The 10-person State Report Card Study Committee will work with educators, advocates, parents and the business community to evaluate the current report card system. By December 15, the committee will report their findings to the Ohio General Assembly.

A former public school teacher for 17 years, Senator Fedor is passionate about Ohio’s children and their futures. She has been an outspoken critic of Ohio’s flawed report card system and its direct impact on the placement of schools under the supervision of academic distress commissions. She is the Ranking Minority Member on the Senate Education Committee and, during the approval of the 2019-20 state budget, served on the Finance Subcommittee on Primary and Secondary Education.

Also appointed to the study committee Monday were state Sens. Peggy Lehner (R-Kettering) and Louis W. Blessing, III (R-Colerain Twp).

Rep. Lisa Sobecki Announces Appointment to the State Report Card Study Committee

Last week, State Rep. Lisa Sobecki (D-Toledo) announced her appointment to the State Report Card Study Committee.

“I am pleased to be the only Democratic member of the Ohio House appointed to this committee,” said Rep. Sobecki. “Being appointed to the committee, I look forward to ensuring that the new state report cards are actually reflective of the hard work and dedication by our school districts across Ohio.”

Rep. Sobecki is eagerly waiting for the study committee to start working on the state report cards. She represents Ohio’s 45th House District in Toledo.

On the day you took your first steps, your parents were very proud.
They took pictures of you standing by yourself with a one-tooth smile on your face, and then they called Grandma and Grandpa to tell them you were walking! It was reason to celebrate and you walk now without thinking about it, but in the new book Her Own Two Feet by Meredith Davis and Rebekah Uwitonze, first steps aren’t always second nature.

One thing was for sure: Rebekah Uwitonze was independent.
Born with her feet twisted sideways and backward, her shoulders stiff, and her middle fingers bent to her palms, Rebekah never let her problems stop her from anything. She could feed herself – she wasn’t a baby! – and though it took awhile to figure out how to quickly reach the bathroom a few feet from her back door, she otherwise got around just fine.

So what if she crawled, or lurched about on the tops of her feet? So what if folks in her Rwandan village told her parents to let her die when she was born? So what if some people said she was “cursed”? As long as Rebekah stayed strong and smart and loved, her feet and her hands weren’t important.

Yes, she’d seen doctors: when she was small, they tried to turn her feet but it hurt a lot. It didn’t work, either, nor did a second attempt, so when a white stranger came to her parents’ home and offered to take Rebekah to America to fix her feet, she was afraid. She remembered being left at the hospital, and how much it hurt. Still, as Papa said, “Chance comes once” and so Rebekah went with a translator on her first airplane trip from one continent to another.

But Bugesara, Rwanda was nothing like Austin, Texas! In Texas, dogs are allowed in the house and on the bed. There were new foods to try, a trampoline to play on, and new holidays to experience. Rebekah learned English, made new friends, and ate French fries while her surgeries healed and she learned to walk again.

But then it was time to leave Texas and go home. Was she ready for it? Some days, nothing goes your child’s way. From the moment she wakes up until the second she shuts her eyes, it’s one thing after another but this is for sure: have “Her Own Two Feet,” and things will fall into perspective.

Beaming strength from every page, authors Meredith Davis (the matriarch of the Texas host family) and Rebekah Uwitonze tell the latter’s story in a matter-of-fact way that elicits compassion without begging for it. That gives readers a chance to quietly observe Uwitonze’s determination, practicality, and her sheer bravery in a quest to overcome a disability. Without being a spoiler, this will leave your child cheering.

“Chance comes once,” as Uwitonze’s Papa said, so seize it and find Her Own Two Feet. If your eight-to-12-year-old wants a good biography or a tale of gratefulness, having it is the first step.

Toledo NAACP Celebrates with Annual Banquet

By Tricia Hall
Sojourner’s Truth Reporter

The annual Freedom Fund Banquet was held on Saturday, October 26, 2019 at the Stranahan Great Hall, and the theme was “When we Fight, We win.” Over 250 attendees comprised of NAACP members, sponsors and community supporters gathered for this annual banquet organized by Toledo NAACP.

“I want to thank the Toledo NAACP for this opportunity tonight. I can’t stress how important the 2020 Census is to our community. They are trying to stop us from voting and from being counted. Everyone must be counted every 10 years,” shared Andre Washington, state of Ohio NAACP officer during his official greetings during the banquet.

Guests dined on food catered by We Be Ribs and listened to various musical selections performed by Organized K-OS Band. WTFG’s Kristian Brown served as the mistress of ceremony for the entire program that opened with Pastor Mi-
